

Archimedes Circle of Fulfillment

Creating opportunities for people with disabilities through universal access to information technologies

Archimedes at Stanford is dedicated to advancing access to information technology for people whose ability is limited in ways that include physical and cognitive impairments, limited literacy, and limitations associated with aging.

To complete the circle of fulfillment that assures solutions reach the people who need them, Archimedes collaborates with leading research centers and affiliates worldwide to identify and address people's needs. It turns to AARTI for prototype development and AARTI Holdings for technology and product licensing.

Based at Stanford but with no funding from the university, Archimedes relies on The Archimedes Foundation for financial support and direction to expand its unique mission as the only international, university-based organization dedicated to developing solutions that enable access to information technology and bringing them to people with disabilities.

