Valuing Educators and Revaluing Education

Valuing educators and revaluing education are international imperatives in an era of massive global technological disruption. The expanding reach of digital platforms makes teachers more important than ever as knowledge navigators in an ocean of dodgy data.

With the change of government there will be some wholesale changes to New Zealand's education system. These include improving the rates of participation in higher education and modifying assessment regimes. Most effective education change will continue to be at the retail level with education professionals growing brains, opening minds and developing skills one learner at a time

Who Should Attend?

Education leaders and aspiring leaders, from across the learning spectrum from early childhood to post-tertiary, who are interested in how different parts of the learning system can better collaborate and be more responsive to rapidly changing needs.
