VALUING EDUCATORS - REVALUING EDUCATION

8 & 9 AUGUST, ROTORUA

Education Leaders Forum is a SmartNet Event

Overview: Leading Teacher Learning

"School leaders need to be proactive leaders of teacher learning as the latter affects student learning..." Prof. Michael Fullan Updated foreword to BES School Leadership and Student Outcomes

Busy education leaders need time away from the urgent to focus on the important. They will return from ELF18 refreshed, inspired and equipped with research-based ideas and resources for professional development in their own learning communities.

On a 5-point scale 98% of respondents rated ELF17 Excellent or Very Good.

Valuing Educators and Revaluing Education

Valuing educators and revaluing education are imperatives in an age of technological disruption. Teachers are more important than ever as knowledge navigators in an ocean of digital data.

Downstream from the two May 2018 Education Summits there are impending wholesale changes to the New Zealand's education system. But learning that really counts will continue to be at the retail level, with education professionals growing brains, opening minds and developing skills one learner at a time. ## Effective professional development

"Out of 947 source reviews the New Zealand Iterative Best Evidence Synthesis Programme's Teacher Professional Learning and Development BES was found to be the most consistent and rigorous. [This] has substantively informed this new evidence about what it takes to develop great teaching that makes a difference for student achievement. "

UK International Reviews into Effective Professional Development, 2014.

New Zealand is an international leader in laying the research foundation for enhancing professional teaching and learning. The challenge is how to turn research into practice. Effective education leaders motivate teaching colleagues to mobilise knowledge and apply research. By bridging the gaps between knowing and doing they more effectively grow brains, open minds, develop skills and stimulate creativity.
